ARTIST RESIDENCIES

2019, Aug-Sept Accepted into Inverewe Garden Estate NTS (National Trust of Scotland) in Poolewe, Wester Ross, for seven weeks.

ABOUT THE ARTIST

Born and raised in Sweden, David Sandum moved to the United States in the early 1990s and settled in Salt Lake City. He attended the University of Utah and graduated in 1999 with a BA in speech communication.

Soon after, he returned to Scandinavia and ultimately secured a position in IT sales. The demands of his new job, on the heels of many years of stress, took a toll on his health, and he fell into a severe depression. It was during this difficult time that he began to draw and paint, inspired by Edvard Munch's philosophy that we should all write or paint our life story.

In 2002, David had his first exhibit in his new hometown of Moss, Norway. Over the years since, he has pursued a career in art, participating in many group exhibits and annual solo gallery shows. He was also awarded several public art commissions in Hvaler, Norway, and Skagen, Denmark. In 2007 David completed a series of Auschwitz-Birkenau paintings in honor of his grandmother, who was a survivor. One of the pieces was acquired by the Mizel Museum in Denver, Colorado.

More recently, David has embarked on several study trips to New York City, Prague, and Amsterdam. In October 2014, he was accepted to work at the prestigious printmaking studio Estudi de Gravat Ignasi Aguirre Ruiz in Barcelona under master printer Ignacio, who has worked with a number of renowned artists, including Dali, Tapies, and Miro. For his etchings, David primarily uses aquatint, drypoint, or carborundum.

When painting, he uses either oil on canvas or gouache on paper. He loves the difference between these techniques. "Working with oils is like taking a long mountain expedition," he says, "while working with etchings is like climbing without a rope. One mistake and you're dead!"

Influences include Scandinavian artists Munch, Karsten, and Sparre, continental masters Gauguin, Van Gogh, Bonnard, and Matisse, and the German Der Blaue Reiter (Blue Rider) movement (1911–1914) spearheaded by Kandinsky.

In 2010, David earned international acclaim by founding Twitter Art Exhibit, a social media initiative whereby artists from around the world send hand-painted postcards that are exhibited for local charities in need of funding. This annual event has gone global, taking place in such cities as Los Angeles, Orlando, and New York City. The 2017 exhibit in Stratford-upon-Avon, England, attracted more than 1,000 artists from 65 countries.

An author as well an artist, David wrote a memoir about his challenges with mental illness: I'll Run Till the Sun Goes Down: A Memoir about Depression and Discovering Art. Published by Sandra Jonas Publishing in Boulder, Colorado, the book was released in September 2015.

David currently lives in Moss, Norway.

PHILANTHROPY

My Twitter Art Exhibit Story, by David Sandum

In 2009, I read in my local paper in Norway, that the Moss library had gotten its funding cut for new children's books. Having lots of artist friends from all over the world on Twitter, I got an idea. What if they sent a hand painted postcard, that was then exhibited and sold to raise funds for my library? The postcard was in my mind symbolic of a tweet, and simple and affordable to send. In return, the entries would be exhibited with their name, Twitter handle, city and country. Right from the start, I pictured it as global. How exciting to see work on the wall from Japan, Asia, India, Europe, Africa and the Americas. I made a blog post about the idea that spread like wildfire. For the artists, the only requirement was that it was postcard size, original and signed. There was no theme, required medium, entry fee or strings attached. 100% of the money raised went to the charity. The response was phenomenal! Soon, 260 fantastic cards from 23 countries arrived in my mailbox. A wall was built and sponsored by a local gallery. Things fell into place and the exhibit was a success. From the funds raised the library was able to purchase 221 new children's books.

In 2011, I was so tired from the gigantic task that I never considered doing it again. But in 2012, another issue came forth in the paper. This time, our city women's shelter was in danger of closing due to a lack of funds. I decided to organize another TAE for them. Again, cards arrived in my mailbox from all over the world, this time from 34 countries. The mailman once knocked on my door and asked what was going on. That year, we helped save the shelter and get all the women currently there a haircut and manicure, the children a bus trip to the zoo in Kristiansand.

At this exhibit, it became clear how the event impacted everyone involved: It connected buyers with artists, artists to other artists, the charity to the community, and TAE had great PR influence to raise awareness to causes in need. News in print, TV, and radio started to cover the event. The inclusiveness also struck a chord. Anyone could participate, amateur and professional alike.

After the second exhibit ended, I was contacted by a professional art curator in Los Angeles, Nat George, who said that this was such a good idea that she wanted to partner up and do it for a charity in her city. Alas TAE went global. We formed a board with a clear goal to continue with the event annually. Since then, TAE has grown tremendously, organized for worthy causes in Orlando, New York City, Stratford Upon Avon (UK). This year it was held in Canberra, Australia. In 2019, TAE it will be in Edinburgh, Scotland.

TAE is growing. This year, over 1200 artists from 67 countries registered. Online sales and donations now also make it possible to raise larger amounts. Please see this link how to support or participate:

In a world full of difficulty and hardship, TAE brings out the good in social media and brings people together. I always site two quotes by Van Gogh at every opening, which I think summarize TAE perfectly,

“Great things are done by a series of small things brought together.” And, “Love many things, for therein lies the true strength, and whosoever loves much performs much and can accomplish much, and what is done in love is done well.”
